

---

Contents

---

Introduction

- |                                     |   |
|-------------------------------------|---|
| 1 The crisis of civic communication | 1 |
|-------------------------------------|---|

Part I: Structure

- |  |    |
|--|----|
| 2 Linkages between the mass media and politics                         | 11 |
| 3 Politicians and the press: an essay on role relationships            | 25 |
| 4 The orientations of journalists to social and political institutions | 45 |
| 5 Towards a comparative framework for political communication research | 59 |
| 6 Comparative research: the extending frontier                         | 73 |
| 7 The formation of campaign agendas in the United States and Britain   | 86 |
| 8 Political communication systems and democratic values                | 97 |

Part II: Development

- |  |     |
|--|-----|
| 9 Producers' attitudes towards television coverage of an election campaign (UK election 1966)          | 111 |
| 10 The construction of election news at the BBC (1979)   | 122 |
| 11 Setting the television news agenda (1983)   | 139 |
| 12 The earnest versus the determined: election news-making at the BBC (1987)                           | 153 |
| 13 Struggles for meaningful election communication (1992)  | 167 |
| 14 Longitudinal analysis of an election communication system: newsroom observation at the BBC, 1966–92 | 182 |

Conclusion

15 The crisis of communication for citizenship: in and out of the ashes?	203
Notes	222
References	227
Index	235