

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction	1
1 Imperialism, History, Writing and Theory	19
Imperialism	20
On being human	25
Writing history and theory	28
Is history important for indigenous peoples?	29
Contested histories	33
Is writing important for indigenous peoples?	35
Writing theory	37
2 Research Through Imperial Eyes	42
The cultural formations of Western research	43
The intersections of race and gender	45
Conceptualizations of the individual and society	47
Conceptions of space	50
Conceptions of time	53
3 Colonizing Knowledges	58
Establishing the positional superiority of Western knowledge	59
Colonizing the disciplines	65
Disciplining the colonized	68
Colonialism and 'Native' intellectuals	69
The 'authentic, essentialist, deeply spiritual' Other	72
4 Research Adventures on Indigenous Lands	78
They came, They saw, They named, They claimed	80
On the road to ... research	83

	Organizing research	85
	Trading the Other	88
	Defining the indigenous 'problem'	90
5	Notes from Down Under	95
	The end of one part the beginning of another	95
	The new language of imperialism	97
	Ten ways to be researched (colonized)	99
	The new millenium	103
6	The Indigenous People's Project:
	Setting a New Agenda	107
	The social movement of indigenous peoples	108
	International mobilization	112
	An agenda for indigenous research	115
	Ethical research protocols	118
7	Articulating an Indigenous Research Agenda	123
	Community research	125
	Tribal research	128
	The case study of an indigenous research initiative	129
	Training indigenous researchers	134
	Insider/Outsider research	137
8	Twenty-five Indigenous Projects	142
	The Projects	143
	1 Claiming	143
	2 Testimonies	144
	3 Story-telling	144
	4 Celebrating survival	145
	5 Remembering	146
	6 Indigenizing	146
	7 Intervening	147
	8 Revitalizing	147
	9 Connecting	148
	10 Reading	149
	11 Writing	149
	12 Representing	150
	13 Gendering	151
	14 Envisioning	152
	15 Reframing	153
	16 Restoring	154
	17 Returning	155

18 Democratizing	156
19 Networking	156
20 Naming	157
21 Protecting	158
22 Creating	158
23 Negotiating	159
24 Discovering	160
25 Sharing	160
Summary	161
 9 Responding to the Imperatives of an Indigenous Agenda: A Case Study of Maori	 163
Western critiques of Western research	164
The challenge of feminist analyses	165
The Waitangi Tribunal and Te Kohanga Reo	168
Research as an extension of knowledge – whose knowledge?	169
The validity of Maori knowledge	172
Negotiating new relationships with non-indigenous researchers	175
Setting the boundaries to research by non-indigenous researchers	178
 10 Towards Developing Indigenous Methodologies: Kaupapa Maori Research	 183
Research by Maori	184
A local approach to critical theory	185
Kaupapa Maori research and positivism	189
How does Kaupapa Maori research proceed?	191
Setting strategic directions	192
 Conclusion: A Personal Journey	 196
 Index	 200