

Contents

Preface	9
Part I: Renaissance Cultural Realities
1. The Making of Italian Renaissance Tragedy	17
Revitalization Process	20
Realism and Living Realities on the Stage	29
Dramaturgical Novelties: Sounds and Dramatic Space	32
2. Renaissance Living Traditions and the Revival of Ancient Tragedy	35
Length of the Dramatic Text: Political Imperatives and Verbal Rhetoric	37
Contemporary Spatial Setting and Courtly Ambiance	46
Brigands and Pirates	54
3. Their Gods, Our God: Christian Religion in the Tragic World of Myth	58
Religion in Christian and Mythological Settings	61
The Deus ex Machina Expedient: Martelli's Tullia and Aretino's Orazia	71
4. The Nature of Kingship: The Debate on Machiavellism	79
The Machiavellian Notion of Kingship and the Tragic Stage	81
Giraldi's Orbecche	85
Theater as Rhetoric of Power	97
5. Tragic Heroines: The Debate on the Emerging Question of Women	101
The Traditional Notion of Womanhood	103
The Stage View of Women	105
Theater's Ambivalent Endorsement of Women	121
Part II: Theatrical Innovations
6. The Evolving Concept of Stage and Dramatic Space	129
The Notion of Scenic and Dramatic Space	136
Aretino's Orazia : A Case in Point	144

7. Representing the Unrepresentable: The Hic et Nunc of Tragedy	155
Dramatic Limitations of Stage Narrative: The Role of the Messenger	158
The Immediacy of the Tragic Here and Now: Giraldi's Orbecche and Aretino's Orazia	162
8. The Theatrical Language of Sounds and Movements	177
Dramaturgical Elements in Rucellai's Oreste : Sounds, Retardation Technique, and Movements	181
Three Dramatizations of Dido's Death: Pazzi, Giraldi, and Dolce	193
Conclusion	203
Notes	209
Bibliography	257
Index	268