

Contents

List of illustrations	ix
Acknowledgements	x
Notes on text	xi
List of abbreviations and glossary	xii
Introduction	1
The 'orthodox' interpretation of Japanese war memories	2
'Memory rifts': reframing the discussion of Japanese war memories	7
1 Historical consciousness in contemporary Japan	10
Theoretical approaches to the study of war memory	10
Towards an 'integrated approach'	12
Judgemental war memory	18
Japanese war memories: a hypothesis	20
A media/cultural studies approach	28
The war representations business: a hypothesis	31
Conclusions	35
2 The 'long postwar'	37
Occupation, 1945–52	38
Japan's return to the international community, 1952–72	42
To the end of the Shōwa era and '1955 system', 1972–93	48
Japan's contested war memories in the Heisei era, 1994–2005	56
Conclusions	63
3 'Addressing the past'	65
State-centredness: the official narrative and its importance	65
Human rights vs state rights: international backing for
Japan's compensation policy	67
The role of American policy	70
'The orthodoxy' and Japanese war memories	73
Culturally deterministic approaches	75

International comparisons	78
Conclusions	83
4 The war as a current affairs issue	85
The war as front-page news	85
Prime ministerial apologies vs Yasukuni worship	87
The fiftieth anniversary statement and politicians' gaffes	94
The press taboo: criticizing the emperor	96
The 'comfort women', lawsuits and compensation	98
Textbooks	100
The A-bombs	102
Returnees	104
Conclusions	105
5 August commemorations	107
Television and war memories	107
War-related television: 1991–2005	110
NHK's survey of war-related programming in 1995	114
The politics of war-related television	116
The sixtieth anniversary as seen on TV	123
Conclusions	130
6 History and ideology	131
Publishing and the selective historical gaze	132
Consuming ideological debate	137
Ideological confrontation: the liberalist view of history	140
History at school: textbook content vs history education	144
Conclusions	150
7 War stories	151
War cinema and war memories	151
Japanese war cinema: an overview	153
War cinema: 1972–2005	155
The secrets of success in war cinema	159
The challenges of progressive film-making	161
Television dramas	163
Simulation fiction	167
Conclusions	169
8 Regional memories	170
Local memories, local victimhood	170
War museums in Japan	171
The politics of war and peace exhibits	172
Consuming museums: museums as sites of education	175
Japanese pacifisms	177

Air raids: from distinctive local memories to generic narrative	180
Okinawa: unique and personalized memories	185
Conclusions	187
9 War and the family	188
Testimony: the voice of the individual	189
War and the family: when love and historical consciousness collide	192
War guilt: inherited traumas in Japanese families	193
Patriotism: commemorating sacrifice	197
The war and day-to-day family relationships	198
Activism: the personal is political	200
Conclusions	203
Epilogue: beyond the sixtieth anniversary	205
Appendix: critiques of orthodox arguments	211
Notes	226
Bibliography	230
Index	245

Illustrations

Figures

1.1	The creation of Japanese judgemental memory	22
5.1	The relative importance for historical consciousness of cultural forms on 436 university students	109
5.2	How much war-related television did you watch during the war-end commemorations?	115
5.3	What impressions did you gain from war-related programming?	116
8.1	Locations of museums	173

Tables

1.1	Japanese judgemental memory	21
4.1	Prime ministerial apologies vs Yasukuni worship, 1972–2005	88
5.1	Television channels in the Tokyo area	111
5.2	War-related programming that gained top-ten viewing ratings in its genre	124
6.1	Major publishers of war-related books and opinion magazines	133
6.2	War history in war memories	138
7.1	Nine war-related renzoku terebi shōsetsu broadcast on NHK	165
8.1	Casualties in air raids on four Japanese cities	185