

Contents

Preface	page ix
Acknowledgments	xv

Part I Value, plurality, parts, and wholes

1	The concept of intrinsic value	3
	Correct emotion and intrinsic value	6
	Some objections to this approach	16
2	The bearers of intrinsic value	20
	The bearers of value: Abstract objects	20
	The bearers of value: Concrete particulars	26
3	Organic unities and the principle of universality	32
	Examples of organic unities	34
	The principle of universality	40
4	Higher goods and the myth of Tithonus	48
	Higher goods	48
	The principle of rank	55
	Higher goods and Mill's distinction	59
	Higher goods and the principle of summation	61
5	Pleasure and its intrinsic value	67
	Sensory and nonsensory pleasure	67
	Pleasure and displeasure in the good, bad, and neutral	73
	True and false pleasures	77
	Hedonism	80
	The value of desire satisfaction	84

6	Consciousness, knowledge, and the consciousness thesis	88
	The consciousness thesis and the value of nonsentient life	93
	Beauty	97
	Value pluralism and its problems	99

Part II Naturalism, nonnaturalism, and warrant

7	The distinctiveness of intrinsic value	103
	The objects of ordinary ethical belief and knowledge	103
	Nonnaturalism and traditional naturalism	107
	The identity thesis and intentional criteria of identity	112
	Constitutional naturalism	118
	Ethical facts and the explanatory requirement	125
	Naturalism and analysis	129
8	Intrinsic value and modest a priori justification	134
	Preliminary remarks and assumptions	134
	A strong conception of a priori knowledge	139
	Modest a priori knowledge and justification	144
	The concept of an intrinsically acceptable proposition	152
9	Coherence and experience	161
	Coherence theories	161
	The regress argument and the doxastic ascent argument	163
	Some objections to coherence theories	173
	Emotional and moral experience as reasons for belief	180
	Mere emotions as a reason for value beliefs	191
	Appendix A: Chisholm's definition of organic unity	196
	Appendix B: Some naturalistic analyses	201
	Selected bibliography	208
	Index	213