1. Vulnerable Yet Agentic: Independent Child Migrants and Opportunity Structures 1
Aida Orgocka
This introductory piece discusses the fluidity of agency and vulnerability as central concepts that describe independent child migration and highlights the role of opportunity structure in qualifying this phenomenon.
2. Tactical Maneuvering and Calculated Risks: Independent Child Migrants and the Complex Terrain of Flight 13
Myriam Denov, Catherine Bryan
Using the conceptual framework of social navigation, this chapter highlights young people's strategies, tactical maneuvers, and calculated risks to assure their individual, and often collective, survival and well-being in the context of flight and resettlement.
3. Beyond Compartmentalization: A Relational Approach Towards Agency and Vulnerability of Young Migrants 29
Roy Huijsmans
Based on fieldwork material from Lao People's Democratic Republic, this chapter introduces the notions of fluid and institutionalized forms of migration as an analytical framework transcending compartmentalized approaches towards migration involving young people. This framework highlights the differing role of networks in becoming a young migrant.
4. When Children Seek Asylum from Their Parents: A Canadian Case Study 47
Michael Bossin, Laila Demirdache
Using the case of a Mexican girl who was granted asylum in Canada on the basis of alleged abuse by her mother in Mexico, the authors show how family members may be the source of vulnerabilities for child migrants. Rapid family reunification is not always in the best interests of independent child migrants.
5. Between Empowerment and Powerlessness: Separated Minors in Sweden 65
Kristina Gustafsson, Ingrid Fioretos, Eva Norström
The conceptual framework of the "liberated self" is employed to describe how the experiences of young migrants are shaped in the intersection between contexts and conditions of transnational migration and the Swedish reception system. The chapter reveals the paradox that migration serves simultaneously to empower and render children powerless.

6. Vulnerability and Agency: Beyond an Irreconcilable Dichotomy for Social Service Providers Working with Young Refugees in the UK Aoife O'Higgins Recognizing the significant barriers young refugees face in accessing comprehensive support, this chapter argues for a participatory approach that involves young migrants in processes that determine such access.	79
7. Conclusions, Reflections, and Prospects for Future Research, Policy, and Programming Christina Clark-Kazak In drawing together some of the key themes from all of the contributions, this chapter highlights the importance of artificiality of categorization processes related to both migration and childhood that independent child migrants encounter, and argues for greater attention to the ways in which categories are constructed in theory and practice.	93
