

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction	x
1 Classical authorities and traditions	1
The ambiguity of pharmaka and venena	2
Prevention, symptoms, and remedies	9
Medical pharmacotherapy and theories of poison	15
Compilation, synthesis, and specific form	20
Conclusion	28
2 Poison and venom in the Latin West before 1300	39
Poisons and venoms in translation	40
Encyclopedic poisons	46
Qualities, quantities, and forms	50
Regulating poisonous drugs	59
Conclusion	64
3 Toward a new toxicology	76
Food, medicine, and poison	79
A new kind of poison text	87
New “problems” of poison	94
Patronage, poison, and medical learning	100
Conclusion	104
4 Plague, poison, and metaphor	116
Putrefied and poisoned air	118
Plague as poison in the body	122
Spreadable and contagious poison	132
Conclusion	138

5	Poisonous properties, bodies, and forms	150
	Occult definitions and forms	152
	Poisonous properties	158
	Poisonous bodies	163
	Poisoning, sorcery, and the evil eye	167
	Sympathetic forms	173
	Conclusion	178
6	Poison, putrefaction, and ontology of disease	188
	Poisons, contagions, and the French Disease	190
	Poison as cause of disease	195
	Separating poison and medicine with Paracelsus	200
	Ontologies of poisons, forms, seeds, and disease	204
	Conclusion	210
7	Reframing toxicology	221
	Reconciling the language of medicine and poison	223
	New approaches to venenum	230
	Poisons, venoms, and corruptions in the body	239
	Conclusion	245
	Epilogue	256
	Bibliography	263
	Index	310