

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
1. Introduction	1
1.1 A case of institutional improvisation: the electronic resources librarian	1
References	6
2. The academic library just before the World Wide Web	7
2.1 A brief history of the development of academic libraries in North America	7
2.2 Information science and computers in contemporary academia	11
2.3 The professional culture and organizational structure of academic libraries	13
2.4 Library automation in practice	18
References	21
3. Digital dawn: libraries experiment and adapt to new technology	23
3.1 The problem of new information resources: revisiting CD-ROM	23
3.2 The early transition from print to electronic journals	32
3.3 The development of an online presence for academic libraries	34
3.4 The first electronic resources librarians	35
References	37
4. The transition to the hybrid library	41
4.1 Changes in traditional library services	41
4.2 Changes in the user population: the wider adoption of computers	46
4.3 Electronic resources management as a new specialization	48
4.4 Managing electronic resources from A to Z	50
4.5 Entering a brave new world: self-directed users, virtual information services, and nonlinear workflows	53
References	54
5. Early trends and transformation: ERMI, ERMS, and separate development	57
5.1 The many faces of the electronic resources librarian in the early 21st century	57
5.2 First attempts at defining electronic resources management	63
5.3 Metadata for electronic resources	69

5.4	Building new organizational structures to manage online Information Services	76
5.5	Academic libraries in the information marketplace: from big deals to document delivery	80
	References	87
6.	The Great Recession and its impact on academic libraries	91
6.1	The budgetary crisis and its impact on higher education and academic libraries	91
6.2	Reclassification, reorganization, and redundancy	95
6.3	Promotion and tenure for librarians during the Great Recession	98
6.4	The endurance of the book as brand: for good or evil	100
	References	101
7.	Reimagining technical services	103
7.1	The growth of electronic resources from eBooks to streaming media	103
7.2	The impact of webscale discovery services and other changes in the online information environment	108
7.3	The expansion of discovery, interoperability, and system integration: from KBART, RDA to APIs	111
7.4	Changes in technical services	114
7.5	Changes in LIS education, professional development, and training	117
	References	119
8.	At the crossroads: ongoing efforts to transform libraries and librarians	123
8.1	The electronic resources librarian in technical services	123
8.2	The role of professional organizations	130
8.3	Measuring our success: electronic resources management and assessment of information services	132
8.4	Consideration of ongoing problems, opportunities, and future possibilities	134
	References	139
	Appendix A Core competencies for electronic resources librarians	141
	Appendix B	149
	Appendix C	157
	Index	163