

Contents

| | |
|--|---------|
| List of figures | ix |
| Acknowledgments | xi |
| Introduction | 1 |
| Terminology | 2 |
| Chapter summaries | 5 |
| A note on sources | 7 |
| 1 Setting the stage: Design and display at the turn of the century | 10 |
| Merchandising at the turn of the century | 10 |
| Spectacle and the museumification of displays | 16 |
| Display men, window dressers, and the first merchandisers | 18 |
| Display before visual merchandising: “scientific selling” | 23 |
| 2 The development of visual merchandising | 35 |
| Professionalization of interior display | 36 |
| The introduction of “visual merchandising” | 47 |
| 3 Downtown remodeling: Implementing new conversations | 57 |
| Selling modernism | 57 |
| Raymond Loewy and the Foley Brothers department store | 65 |
| Gimbels gets the Raymond Loewy “magic touch” | 73 |
| 4 The challenge of efficiency in a specialty shop | 89 |
| Differences in display: merchandising in upscale specialty stores | 90 |
| Neiman Marcus, 1941 and 1953 | 93 |
| 5 Seeing change: “The personality of a store” | 116 |
| Early suburban branch locations | 118 |

viii Contents

| | | |
|---|---|-----|
| | “Informality” at Neiman Marcus, Preston Center | 125 |
| | Raymond Loewy Associates’ “community” building | 131 |
| 6 | “Image building” in the shopping center, the 1960s | 143 |
| | From small-town store to national retailer: the J. C. Penney Company | 144 |
| | Together under one roof: the NorthPark Mall | 151 |
| | Conclusion | 177 |
| | Bibliography | 186 |
| | Index | 190 |